

FDA ADVISORY
No. 2022-1252

07 JUL 2022

TO: ALL CONSUMERS

SUBJECT: FDA STATEMENT ON THE ISSUE OF RECALLED FOOD PRODUCTS DUE TO THE PRESENCE OF ETHYLENE OXIDE

The Food and Drug Administration Philippines has received reports on the on-going recall of certain batches of the product “Lucky Me! Instant Pancit Canton Noodles” in European countries and Taiwan due to the presence of the ethylene oxide on these products. In the Philippines, the FDA registered products “Lucky Me! Instant Pancit Canton Noodles” are manufactured locally by Monde Nissin Philippines.

For public information, ethylene oxide is a processing aid used to disinfect herbs and spices. In order to ensure that the public health is protected, the use of ethylene oxide for sterilizing purposes in food is not allowed in the European Union (EU). However, there can still be traces from the ingredients or raw materials hence the EU set a maximum residue levels at a very low level based on the type of commodity.

The FDA is currently investigating this matter and coordinating with the aforementioned food business operator to check its compliance. We shall provide updates on the result of investigation for public information.

The FDA on Tuesday (July 5) presented its latest list of food import violations. A total of 19 shipments were rejected for containing excessive levels of pesticide residues, including a total of 4,431.96 kg from seven instant noodle shipments.

The largest shipment rejected from these countries was 4,047.4 kg of Mie Sedaap cup noodles from Indonesia, which was found to contain excessive levels of ethylene oxide and were imported from Taiwan's ELOM Group Company. There were five types of products intercepted, including Korean Spicy Soup, Kuah Rasa Baso Spesial, Rasa Ayam Bawang Telur, Korean Spicy Chicken, and Rasa Soto.

Also intercepted were 327.6 kg of Lucky Me Curly Spaghetti from the Philippines, also imported from ELOM Group Company, as well as 56.96 kg of Acecook cup noodles from Japan, imported by Zhong Xin International Development Co.

Among the products rejected from China were 972 kg of Best Camellia Oil imported by Taiwan's Eugene Electronic Co. The oil was found to contain excessive levels of the carcinogen Benzo[a]pyrene.

Australia New Zealand Food Standards Council (ANZFS)

Food Ministers agreed to phase out ethylene oxide (used to disinfect certain foods) and to permit the limited use of food irradiation as a safer alternative for herbs, spices, and herbal infusions.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE

Thursday, 13 September 2001

Food Ministers agreed to phase out ethylene oxide (used to disinfect certain foods) and to permit the limited use of food irradiation as a safer alternative for herbs, spices, and herbal infusions.

The Australia New Zealand Food Standards Council (ANZFS), meeting today by teleconference, decided that in the longer term interests of public health and safety, the chemical Ethylene Oxide, used to disinfect some foods, must be completely phased out from the food supply by 1 October 2003.

The Council also approved the limited use of food irradiation of herbs, spices, and herbal infusions as a safe and effective replacement technology.

Food Irradiation

This is the first application to irradiate food since ANZFS agreed to a food irradiation standard in 1999. The decision followed a stringent safety assessment by the Australia New Zealand Food Authority (ANZFA) over a ten-month period, which was subject to scientific peer review by local and international experts. The safety assessment concluded that the treatment of herbs, spices and herbal infusions, with the stated doses of irradiation was safe.

Ministers agreed not to approve irradiation of nuts. While it is considered a safe practice, they concluded on the scientific evidence available, that there was no technological need for the irradiation of nuts on quarantine grounds.

The Ministers considered that irradiation has considerable benefits for consumers and industry, in preventing food poisoning and pest infestation and controlling weeds.

The safety assessment also took account of two studies by the World Health Organisation in 1994 and 1999, which confirm the safety of food irradiation.

Food irradiation has been used extensively overseas over the past two decades with no indication of safety problems and is currently permitted for use in food in over 40 countries worldwide. All irradiated foods will be required to be labelled, so that consumers can make an informed choice.

The phase out of the use of ethylene oxide

Ethylene oxide is a processing aid, which is used to disinfect herbs and spices. Its use is being phased out worldwide and is being replaced with alternatives such as food irradiation and steam treatment, where appropriate. In order to ensure that public health and safety is protected, Ministers agreed to maintain the current strict maximum level in herbs and spices for ethylene oxide of 20mg/kg. In addition, a withholding period of three weeks will be required in future to allow a reduction of any residues after treatment. This will ensure that these foods continue to be disinfected while a smooth transition to other safer and more sustainable technologies can occur.

While this is an Australian only standard as New Zealand regulates Ethylene Oxide under its own legislation, the New Zealand standard will be identical to the Australia only standard.

Ministers have determined that this chemical will be completely phased out over the next 2 years with no exemptions for stock-in-trade at the end of this period.

Ministers agreed to the need for a strong public information program about these issues to help consumers make informed choices.
